

Niccolo Durazzi

Niccolo Durazzi is a Senior Lecturer in Political Economy of Social Policy in the School of Social and Political Science at the University of Edinburgh and a Visiting Fellow at the International Inequalities Institute at the London School of Economics and Political Science. His research focuses on the policies underpinning advanced capitalist countries' transition into a knowledge-based post-industrial societies, with a specific interest on education, skills and labour market policies. His work has appeared, among others, in Journal of European Public Policy, Socio-Economic Review, Regulation & Governance and Politics & Society. He is currently working on a project funded by the Leverhulme Trust titled "The Political Economy of Knowledge-based Growth".