

Umberto Marengo

Umberto Marengo's professional experience spans across finance, international development and EU industrial policy. He is currently a Strategy Manager British International Investment, the British Development Finance Institutions. Previously, he worked at the Economist Intelligence Unit, Boston Consulting Group, and the European Commission, advising governments, international organizations, and financial institutions on economic development, strategic planning, and sustainable finance.

Umberto is also a visiting fellow at the European University Institute where he teaches on public policy and corporate strategy, combining academic insight with corporate experience.

Marengo holds a Ph.D. in International Studies from the University of Cambridge, where his research explored the European Union's role in global energy markets.

His policy publications covered a wide range of topics including EU trade policy, EU governance, energy policy, development finance and impact assessment for public financial institutions.
